Seeds of Courage

GRACE WANJIRU

Copyright © 2026 Grace Wanjiru

All rights reserved.

No part of this book may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means without the prior written permission of the publisher, except for brief quotations in reviews and articles.

First edition 2026

To every girl who was told to sit down.

Contents

CHAPTER 1	The First Step	1
CHAPTER 2	When It Rains	13
CHAPTER 3	Harvest	25
About the Author		39

CHAPTER 1

The First Step

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not

explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house.

Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house.

Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

CHAPTER 2

When It Rains

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply

started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a

jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not

explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house.

Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a

jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

What the Rain Taught Me

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

CHAPTER 3

Harvest

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply

started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house.

Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply

started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply

started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready. When I was nine, my grandmother handed me a jembe and pointed at the hard ground behind the kitchen. She did not explain. She simply started digging, and I followed, because that is what you did in her house. Years later I understood that she was teaching me how courage works: you start before you feel ready.

About the Author

Grace Wanjiru is a teacher and farmer in Nyeri. This is her first book.